Corporate and regulatory compliance has exploded as an area of importance to a variety of business organizations in recent years. Corporate compliance programs must be well planned and rigorously implemented throughout a business organization. Notwithstanding the importance of corporate compliance, there is disagreement over the best way to implement and enforce a compliance program.

This conference will bring together academics, practitioners, and government officials, who approach compliance from different perspectives. The conference will present three panels of distinguished speakers: (1) Litigating the Adequacy of a Compliance Program, (2) Structural Issues in the Compliance Department, and (3) Organizational Culture and Developing a Culture of Compliance. Andrew Donohue, Chief of Staff of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, will present a keynote address.
